Overview

This Government-Wide Diversity and Inclusion Strategic Plan (Plan) outlines the implementation of the President's Executive Order 13583 on Establishing a Coordinated Government-Wide Initiative to Promote Diversity and Inclusion in the Federal Workforce (the Executive order). This document incorporates recommendations from stakeholders with expertise in the areas of diversity and inclusion, equal employment opportunity, and organizational change.

The Plan provides a shared direction, encourages commitment, and creates alignment so agencies can approach their workplace diversity and inclusion efforts in a coordinated, collaborative, and integrated manner. Three key goals provide a path for successful agency diversity and inclusion efforts: workforce diversity, workplace inclusion, and sustainability.

Background

The Executive order directs executive departments and agencies (agencies) to develop and implement a more comprehensive, integrated, and strategic focus on diversity and inclusion as a key component of their human resources strategies. This approach should include a continuing effort to identify and adopt best practices to promote diversity and inclusion and to identify and remove any barriers to equal employment opportunity, consistent with merit system principles and applicable law.

A commitment to equal opportunity, diversity, and inclusion is critical to accomplishing the Federal government's missions. By law, the Federal government's recruitment policies should "endeavor to achieve a work force from all segments of society," while avoiding discrimination for or against any employee or applicant on the basis of race, color, religion, sex (including pregnancy or gender identity), national origin, age, disability, sexual orientation or any other prohibited basis. (5 U.S.C. 2301(b)(1), 2302(b)). As the Nation's largest employer, the Federal government has an obligation to lead by example. Seeking to attain a diverse, qualified workforce is a cornerstone of the merit-based civil service.

In order to cultivate high performing organizations for the 21st century, the Federal government must tap into the rich resources of our global community and ensure fairness and justice in the workplace. To accomplish this, we define diversity broadly, including, but not limited to, the legally protected categories. Diversity encompasses all that makes us unique, including the diversity of thought and perspective that accompanies our identity. Only then can we realize the full performance potential and harness the innovation that diversity offers. This is more than a legal or moral imperative, it is a business imperative for public service.

The difficult budget environment and the increased demand for innovation and efficiency present challenges to projecting and meeting future Federal human resources needs. Agencies can address these challenges with a diverse and inclusive workforce built by casting a broad net in the search for top talent, wherever it may be found. Agencies that employ a workforce that draws from all corners of America – in filling positions from the Senior Executive Service (SES) to the entry level - will create a culture that fosters creativity and benefits from a greater return on investments in the workforce.

Moreover, research has demonstrated that, while organizations may have diversity in their midst, employees may not perceive that their social identities are appreciated and included in the workplace. For this reason, building inclusive workplaces ensures that all employees feel included, connected, and engaged.

A comprehensive strategic human capital plan is critical to the ability of all Federal agencies to carry out assigned missions and properly manage their diverse workforces. An important dimension of each agency's human capital plan is the ability to identify and close current and emerging skill gaps thereby enabling the agency to carry out its mission more cost-effectively. The U.S. Office of Personnel Management is working with the Chief Human Capital Officers (CHCO) Council and agencies to assess current and emerging skill gaps and develop strategies to close skill gaps in mission-critical occupations and skills areas that have the greatest impact on Government-Wide, and agency-specific, performance. The desired outcomes of this effort are: (1) increased proficiency levels in targeted skills areas through training, and (2) institutionalized processes for identifying and addressing skills gaps (Government-wide and agency-specific).

From 2008 to 2010, a study of hiring trends across Federal agencies revealed that information technology (IT) and cyber security professionals, nurses, contract and acquisition specialists, border patrol agents, and program analysts were among the top 15 most-hired positions within government. In each of these fields, research shows that recruiting with an emphasis on cultural, experiential, and cognitive diversity will improve agencies' prospects of having a workforce that is capable of addressing increasingly complex challenges more efficiently. Beyond traditional measures of diversity, seeking individuals with varying degree types; Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics (STEM) backgrounds; and professional experience will also benefit agencies and offices Government-Wide.

Creating a diverse Federal workforce that draws from all segments of society requires sustained commitment to ensuring a level playing field upon which applicants and employees may compete for opportunities within government. Sustaining the highest levels of integrity and professionalism through new outreach and recruiting efforts is paramount to achieving the strategic vision set out in this Plan.

Definitions of “Diversity” and “Inclusion”

We define workforce diversity as a collection of individual attributes that together help agencies pursue organizational objectives efficiently and effectively. These include, but are not limited to, characteristics such as national origin, language, race, color, disability, ethnicity, gender, age, religion, sexual orientation, gender identity, socioeconomic status, veteran status, and family structures. The concept also encompasses differences among people concerning where they are from and where they have lived and their differences of thought and life experiences.

We define inclusion as a culture that connects each employee to the organization; encourages collaboration, flexibility, and fairness; and leverages diversity throughout the organization so that all individuals are able to participate and contribute to their full potential.

Federal Government-Wide Diversity and Inclusion Vision Statement

Be the Nation’s model employer by leveraging diversity and fostering inclusion to deliver the best public service.
